

In every way possible, Proceedings dominates the reading of military leaders. It's read by top decision makers, high ranking military officials, and those who have a say in the spending of huge military budgets. Think of top decision makers in the military. They are Proceedings readers.

Proceedings is the publication valued most by the nation's leading policy makers on defense. As the flagship publication of the U.S. Naval Institute with a 134 year heritage, Proceedings is filled with the latest insights from the nation's top policy makers.

USNI

U.S. NAVAL INSTITUTE

www.usni.org

They've got access to $675 billion in defense budgets.

With Proceedings, you've got access to them.

Proceedings overwhelms the competition. It's not even close.

According to a recent survey, Proceedings ranked first with military readers in the categories of "read first", "must read", "most important", "most respected", "most influential".

Seventy-two percent of military readers said Proceedings had more useful content than our competition. Ninety-six percent read three out of four issues (none of our competitors scored more than 25%). When compared to our competitors, Proceedings ranks first in editorial quality, credibility, and importance to the debate on national defense.

If there were ever an easy decision for a media buyer, it's this: to get in front of the people who control the military budgets, to have your message taken seriously, get your ad in Proceedings.

WHICH ONE IS MOST IMPORTANT?

WHICH WOULD YOU READ FIRST?

